Customer Premise Equipment—Service & Supplies (Interconnects)

This section contains CPE companies—firms that sell or lease telephone terminal equipment for interconnection to telephone company lines—listed alphabetically by city within each state. Canada, Puerto Rico and Virgin Islands companies that supplied information are listed at the end of the section.

The following information was requested from each company: mailing address, telephone/telex number, company president, sales manager, number of employees, number of service personnel, sell/service data comm equipment and brands of PBXs and key systems handled. Parent Co. and its location is also listed where applicable.

An alphabetical list of companies appears at the end of each state section.

Independent Telephone Operating Companies by States

This section lists every city and town in the United States having a telephone exchange of commercial size—other than those associated with the Bell Telephone Operating Companies.

In this compilation of independent telephone company exchanges, the listing is arranged by state and then alphabetically by community where the headquarters and branch or sub-exchanges are located, or in which they operate.

A numeric code (see below) preceding the exchange name indicates the size of the company by total number of access lines. This is followed by statistical data relating to that exchange in parenthesis (if served by the company), and the name, address and telephone number of that company or its operating headquarters. If the operating headquarters is in another city or state, a reference is given. A reference is also provided to the company's operating group affiliation or other association by ownership or management. For additional information, see the Operating HQ or affiliate listing in the Operating Group Section.

The listing continues with exchanges served, key personnel, and line data. Various plant data includes: Sheath miles of aerial cable, underground cable (in duct), and buried cable; Conductor (pair) miles of wire for open wire, wire within aerial cable, underground (in duct), and direct buried; Coaxial cable miles; Pole line miles; Underground conduit in trench and duct miles; Toll, exchange and station carrier by number of channels and route miles; Number of microwave "hops" and channel miles.

Also shown is the purchasing responsibility and financial statistics, such as annual operating revenues, total plant investment, and construction budgets for '83, '84, '85. If furnished, REA borrowers are so identified.

An alphabetical list of companies at the end of each state gives the main exchange city under which headquarters information is shown for a company. We have attempted, as much as possible, to list companies in the states in which they operate, although in some instances, multiple state operations prevent uniformity.

1—Over 100,000 Access Lines
2—75,000 to 99,999 Access Lines
3—50,000 to 74,999 Access Lines
4—30,000 to 49,999 Access Lines
5—20,000 to 29,999 Access Lines
6—10,000 to 19,999 Access Lines
7— 7,500 to 9,999 Access Lines
8— 5,000 to 7,499 Access Lines
9— 2,500 to 4,999 Access Lines
10— 1,000 to 2,499 Access Lines
11— 750 to 999 Access Lines
12— 500 to 749 Access Lines
13—Less than 499 Access Lines

Figures following name of town or city indicate number of access lines at that place only.

AL —Access Lines
ES —Electronic
CDO—Community Dial Office
ADO—Attended Dial Office
TC —Toll Center

Independent Telephone Companies Grouped According to Number of Access Lines

World telecom 1984 spending to level out at $78.8 billion

DEL MYERS, EDITOR, and CZATDANA INAN, DIRECTOR-MARKETING RESEARCH

TELEPHONY'S 1984 Annual Survey of International Telecommunications is the primary source of the information in this article. Supplementing the survey, however, is information obtained by TELEPHONY editors throughout the year from world telecommunications authorities.

The survey, published in English, French and Spanish and sent to a selected sample of PTT administrations and operating companies, solicited information on planned spending and plant investment.

More importantly, the information provided through the survey allows an accurate quantification of the world's existing telecommunications plant and its overall rate of growth. This information is much more valuable to the operating entity managers and planners, as well as their suppliers, than is the traditional measure of teledensity (the number of telephones versus population).

We deeply appreciate the continuing effort and cooperation of telecommunications authorities throughout the world in providing the information needed to reach this elusive goal.

And, as announced in TELEPHONY's 1983 survey report (Feb. 28, 1983, p. 39), all of the survey information is being made available to the International Telecommunication Union for use by its members. The report will be available to the public in June.–Editor.

THE 1984 world telecommunications spending estimate of $78.8 billion is like a stroboscopic view of a moving object—the action only appears to be stopped.

The estimate itself (Table 1) is based on a constant dollar, weighted extrapolation of data from 39 countries serving approximately 80% of the world's 565 million telephones.

Included in the estimate, however, is the 1984 United States estimate of $30.9 billion, a volatile figure that requires considerable interpretation (see TELEPHONY, Jan. 16, p. 34). The balance of the estimate, $47.9 billion, includes some unique international factors that also need interpretation. Estimates in United States dollars, for example, must be related to monetary exchange rates as well as inflation to prevent a distorted view. The degree of telecommunications liberalization and protectionism also introduces obscurity in the actual spending for customer premises equipment and the true market value of expenditures for equipment where an open market does not exist.

The net positive contribution of telecommunications investment to development never will be clear so long as the debate continues to pit the purely social (and, usually, desirable) dimensions of telecommunications policy against its economic or commercial dimensions. Too often, such elementary economic considerations as life-cycle costs, pay-back period and contribution to the gross national or local product are ignored. The absence of such data probably is the single strongest factor limiting telecommunications investment funds.

Other than the United States, the 1984 big spenders will be Japan, $7.3 billion (Yen 1.7 trillion); West Germany, $5.4 billion (DM14.8 billion); France, $3.9 billion (FF33 billion); Italy, $3.0 billion (Lire 5.0 trillion) and the United Kingdom, $3.0 billion (£2.1 billion).

Nevertheless, telecommunications spending in all the major countries except Italy is leveling out and growth rates are averaging approximately 5% annually; for example, Bell Canada's construction budget remained stable during the 1974-1980 period but, in 1982, the capital expenditure of $1.4 billion was less than the budgeted figure of $1.6 billion and identical to the 1981 budget figure of $1.4 billion. Bell Canada's actual spending figure for 1983 is not yet available but it probably will be $1.2 billion, 16% less than the budget projection.

a. Figures as of January-December due to fiscal/calendar reporting.
b. DGT does not supply PBXs for rent or purchase. Northern Business Information (New York) figures show PBX installed base rose from 119,000 in January to 130,000 at the end of December. Key systems, which are privately and DGT supplied, rose from 304,000 to 327,000 and 148,000 to 160,000, respectively. TELEPHONY estimates 550,000 new lines installed annually, distributed Juemont-Schneider, 37%; CIT-Alcatel of CGE, 30%; Thomson, 16%; and CGCT (former ITT subsidiary), 6%.
c. 93% of the reported total are under 25 line systems. Additional 225,000 key systems reported. Bundespost competes in PBX market, other major suppliers are Siemens, Telefonbau & Normalzeit, SEL, DeTeWe and Te Ka De.
d. Additional 500,000 key systems reported, averaging 2.5 lines per system.
e. Estimated 150,000 PBXs. No reliable estimate for key systems.
nr. no report.

Public Corp. (NTT) of Japan also has stabilized spending—in 1982, the latest year for which actual figures are available, spending was 0.5% less than the budgeted amount.

In the United States, the Independent telephone companies spent $5.0 billion in 1983 versus an estimate of $5.1 billion. American Telephone & Telegraph Co. (AT&T) exercised tight financial control over all its operations in the year before divestiture.

In 1983, the Bell operating companies or BOCs (now separated from AT&T), and AT&T Communications (formerly AT&T Long Lines) spent only $14.8 billion, 11.1% less than the budgeted amount of $16.8 billion.

Italy, in contrast to other major countries, is planning substantial growth. During the 1978-1982 period, expenditures amounted to $6.5 billion (Lire 10.5 trillion). For the 1983-1987 period, the projected figure is $15.5 billion (Lire 25 trillion).

Accurately comparing the 1984 world spending forecast of $79.8 billion with the $75.5 billion actually spent in 1983 requires some simple arithmetic—subtracting $3.6 billion from the 1984 forecast. This amount represents a data communications equipment estimate in the United States 1984 forecast. The 1983 forecast did not include a comparable figure.

The $75.5 billion actually spent in 1983 was $3.0 billion less than forecast with the United States accounting for $2.1 billion of the reduction.

Excluding data communications equipment, therefore, the adjusted 1984 forecast is $75.2 billion, $300 million less than the 1983 actual spending figure. Indeed, if many managers achieve their customary under-budget objectives in 1984, the actual spending will level out at approximately $75 billion.

Since annual expenditures in this range are approximately 16% of the world's total estimated $475 billion investment in telecommunications plant, is the world telecommunications industry only maintaining the status quo? Is real growth occurring? Where? Can this relatively flat annual spending for telecommunications be reconciled with the explosive telecommunications growth customarily predicted for the "information age"?

Answers to these questions mainly lie in the complex but interrelated areas of technology, economics, protectionism and liberalization/deregulation. The latter terms, although not interchangeable because of national legal differences, mean essentially the same thing: the elimination or curtailment of the monopoly role in supplying telecommunications equipment and services to customers and a corresponding establishment or expansion of the customer's role.

Technology and economics inexorably are forcing the issue of liberalization because technology leads to a much greater differentiation of demand and revenues among business users than among residential customers.

At the same time, technology offers alternate and economical ways to satisfy the demands and creates the climate in which alternate sources of supply demand the right to exist with or in place of the monopoly.

Business user groups such as the International Communications Assn. (ICA), the International Telecommunications User Group (INTUG) and the currently inactive Business Telecommunications Services in Australia (see story on p. 50) are the ultimately invincible vanguard of telecommunications liberalization.

The United States is the best (some say, worst) example of what happens when the trustworthy monopoly crumbles. Certainly, the United States is not the model that many PTTs willingly intend to follow.

"If we were crazy," France's telecommunications Director General Jacques Dondoux told TELEPHONY (April 25, 1983, p. 25), "we could say, let's be like the United States and have 20 telephone companies in the country. But I have never heard a suggestion that a U.S. Bell operating company be cut up in 20 pieces. . . .French telecommunications. . .[with] about 20 million main lines [and] 20 administrative regions is about the same order of magnitude as an American BOC."

". . .my personal determination," Dondoux said, "is to have adequate management within the framework of the regulated system to make sure the French do not wish to deregulate."

ble for more than 75% of the country's telecommunications modernization program, told TELEPHONY (Sept. 26, 1983, p. 32) that "SIP is not against further steps toward liberalization, as long as this process, which is to some extent inevitable, is gradual and care is taken to avoid waste due to duplication of plant or services."

SIP's strategic objectives, according to Benzoni, are development of the basic (telephone) service to the telephone maturity level of the principal industrialized nations (approximately 40 telephones per 100 people), network evolution and the implementation of new services and telematics. "Setting up private networks to serve particular markets," Benzoni said, "could use public network equipment, thus safeguarding its uniqueness and the economy of its operation."

"The government [of the United Kingdom] wants the marketplace to play a much more significant role in telecommunications," said Sir George Jefferson, chairman of British Telecom in a recent exclusive TELEPHONY interview (Jan. 23, p. 24). tion and withdrawal from licensing is for the future to determine."

These statements from world telecommunications leaders are typical: Every administration and telephone company in "mature" telecommunications nations is responding in some way to pressures for liberalization.

Like beauty, however, the adequacy of the response may lie in the eye of the beholder. At Telecom 83 in Geneva, for example, a business user complained to TELEPHONY of PTT unresponsiveness and described the growing impatience of the business community with PTT attitudes that view "compliance with a request as the first step in turning the asylum over to the inmates."

Understanding the nature and the extent of liberalization trends is important because they affect the accuracy of world telecommunications spending estimates. Since the United States has deregulated new customer premise equipment, it now is supplied by competitors, some of which are separate subsidiaries or divisions of regulated common carriers. Other suppliers are manufacturers, distributors, retailers and the like. Therefore, the telecommunications spending figures of the carriers no longer account for substantial sums and none of the competitors has an incentive to reveal annual sales forecasts.

Similarly, PTTs and administrations which permit interconnection of privately owned equipment to the network do not include it in their annual spending estimates. PTT type-approval, however, is a powerful form of regulation that makes this policy less open than it appears and, in Europe, PTTs purchase 75% to 90% of all telecommunications equipment.

Nevertheless, a substantial part of the world telecommunications growth associated with the information age is taking place outside the traditional boundaries of the world's telecommunications monopolies. TELEPHONY's 1984 spending estimate includes an accurate forecast for business communications equipment made by the large business users in the United States and a composite view of business communications development in Western Europe (Table 2).

Similarly, the level of expenditures for public switched network equipment and the numerical growth of the installed base (Table 3) do not tell the whole story. Virtually every administration and telecommunications company in developed and developing countries alike is purchasing or planning to purchase only state of the art equipment: stored program controlled time division multiplex (digital) switching equipment, fiber optic and satellite transmission links, packet switching and related data communications equipment, hybrid voice and data equipment, and the like.

And virtually every administration and telecommunications company expects to realize some form of the integrated services digital network (ISDN) within several years. In the United Kingdom and West Germany, for example, ISDN trials or limited service are imminent. In the United States, pre-ISDN services providing extensive digital connectivity are a reality. And, New Zealand's unique topography and commercial development make an extensive ISDN possible within the near future (see story beginning on p. 60).

While enhancing network capacity and capability is possible in mature telecommunications countries, many of the world's developing countries remain on the threshold of telecommunications development.

The 55 African nations included in TELEPHONY's international survey have 7 million telephones, slightly more than 1% of the world's 565 million phones (Table 4). Of Africa's total, the Republic of South Africa accounts for 43% and Algeria, Egypt, Kenya, Libya, Morocco, Nigeria, Tunisia and Zimbabwe account for 80% of the remainder.

The least developed countries have approximately 500,000 telephones and, currently, plan to spend an average of $350 million annually during the period of 1983-2000, a total of $5.9 billion.

Africa's overall development plans emphasize rural telecommunications and the projected growth rate of 14% annually will result in only 1 telephone per 100 people by the year 2000. While teledensity may be an insufficient measure of telecommunications development in industrialized countries, it clearly measures telecommunications insufficiency elsewhere.

Developing nations potentially are a huge market but telecommunications is not necessarily the number one choice for the commitment of scarce development funds. Generally, they and the international lenders concentrate funds in such areas as agriculture, electrical power and transportation.

During the 1968-1981 period, for example, 80% of World Bank loans went to seven sectors, including telecommunications. The share allocated to telecommunications, however, was 5.4% in the 1969-1973 period; 2.3%, 1974-1978; and 1.7%, 1979-1981. This decline in telecommunications funding is spectacular, especially since major supporters of the World Bank include the world's major telecommunications supplier nations: France, Germany, Japan, the United Kingdom and the United States.

The economic truth in this trend is, however, inescapable: Projects that can't withstand the trip to the bank don't get off the ground. Telecommunications either is not an essential infrastructure for development as widely claimed or telecommunications policy makers and officials are not making a convincing case for its contribution to the gross national and local product.

Costa Rica, which has a relatively stable economy, is a convincing example: During the 1973-1983 period, investment in rural telecommunications increased from 1% to 9% of the total budget, rural access increased from 28% to 36% of the total and business usage increased from 12.6% to 31.8% of the total number of calls.

TELEPHONY's 1984 world telecommunications spending forecast contains, therefore, more than a touch of contradiction: As developing countries struggle to extend telecommunications to their borders, the developed telecommunications supplier nations are locked in a different kind of struggle: Some of them want to contain telecommunications manufacture and control of service within their own borders while others are committed to an open scheme.

Virtually all telecommunications experts agree that few national markets alone are large enough to sustain a complete telecommunications manufacturing industry.

Therefore, the competition is intense and the weapons are not the clearly superior and more economical products of one supplier. In this area, current state of the art technology is a great equalizer!

The struggle centers on which national manufacturers will gain sufficient world market share to survive without subsidy and whether or not overt and covert telecommunications protectionism exacts too high a political and economic price to prevail as any nation's telecommunications policy.

In 1984 and beyond, this factor likely will emerge as the most powerful determinant of world telecommunications spending. □
